

Does your brain often prevent you from showing interest (social wondering) in others or considering what others may want to do based on their interests?

Then you may be getting a visit from the Un-Wonderer!

The Un-Wonderer is pretty quiet and can sneak in when you least expect it. Take a look below for some clues to help you spot the Un-Wonderer:

-  He stops the citizen from showing interest in others (asking someone questions about their interests).
-  He stops the citizen from thinking about what others may want to do based on their interests.

No problem... Superflex and the Un-Wonderer have battled before so take a look below for some ways to defeat this latest Unthinkable.

-  Look at the person who is talking to let him know that you are thinking about him and what he is saying.
-  Listen to the topic and then ask a “social wonder” question to your friend.
-  Create a people-file in your brain on this person so that you can pull up that information later when you are talking to him.
-  Remember the Wh-question words (what, where, who, when which and why) and use these words to ask others questions about what they may want to talk about.
